is a well-known physician in Washington, Dr I. C. Hall, who relates many incidents of the bublic men he has attended in his long and liant experience. At the head of his profession, he has attained old age almost without an enemy. I know no man more universally beleved. It is one of the doctor's peculiarities that he does not trouble himself with money atters, and is careless about collecting his fees ace, however, during a temporacy his clerk made out some bills, and, among others, sent one to the President. On his return, e doctor found a note from General Jackson nclosing a check for the amount, deducting ar old charge which had been called for and settled, and for which he held a receipt.

The fact that the bill had been sent was not ss a mortification to Dr. Hall than the error in the account itself. But on looking at the President's check, he found that the General had forgotteen to sign it! He therefore returned it, with the expression of his regret that the bil ad been sent, and pointed out the General's mission. The check was duly signed and sent back inclosed in a noth, with this remark: Dear Doctor-The best of men is liable to mistakes.

ANDREW JACKSON. Dr. Hall testifies to the old bero's kindness to ill his people, especially to his servants. Once when the small-pox broke out among them, an-nearly everybody else fied, the President red ained in the White House, and waited on lack and white, with unremitting attention.

How they Fooled the Old Man .- The Gilman Star has an account of an elopement re-cently perpetrated near that town. The lover went after his girl in a light vehicle with muffled wheels, while an accomplice drove a heavier machine, adapted to making as much noise as possible. The lady being duly received at the ndow and deposited in the muffled vehicle, the heavy one dashed off toward Gilman at a furious rate, with papa in hot pursuit, while the lovers were noiselessly driving in the opposite direc-tion. Before morning Mr. Ward and Miss Green were made one flesh.
